Dear Families,

I watched the movie “Hidden Figures” this week-end. WOW! If you haven’t seen it I’d recommend it. In 1961 a group of black women are working for NASA in Langley in Virginia. As you may recall from history we were right in the middle of segregation. They had “colored” bathrooms and “colored” drinking fountains. The black people had to sit in the back of the bus. Hard to believe in our times that these things went on a very short period of time ago! The women in this movie were brilliant. They were probably genius IQ’s and were treated as nothing more than “computers”. Computers was the name they gave to the black women who did the calculations. One woman had to run a half a mile to the bathroom so she could use the “colored” bathroom. Well eventually things changed and they realized the potential and wrong doing. And the head engineer said, “There is only one color at Langley”. And they were all working towards one goal -to get to the moon. It was an inspirational story and gives one hope! Isn’t that something we need a lot of? In one scene the little girls are talking to their mother about the drill they had at school. They had to hide under their desks in case of nuclear attack. (I remember doing these in my school in the 60’s). So great movie for discussion in a family. And let’s continue to pray for peace in our world.
